2020 Dems call for Kavanaugh impeachment after new report of sexual misconduct

President Trump said the Justice Department should "rescue" him.

U.S. President Donald Trump rejected Democrats' calls for impeaching Supreme Court Justice Brett Kavanaugh on Sunday after a new report that alleged sexual misconduct, encouraging Kavanaugh to sue for libel and suggesting the Justice Department could "rescue" him.

At least three Democratic presidential candidates called for Kavanaugh's impeachment after the New York Times report.

The Times essay, drawn from an upcoming book written by the newspaper's reporters, discussed a previously unreported account of Kavanaugh's behavior as a freshman at Yale University that echoed allegations against him by former classmate Deborah Ramirez.

The new account, from former classmate Max Stier, describes Kavanaugh pushing his private parts into the hand of a female student at a party, according to the Times piece. The report said the classmate notified U.S. senators and the FBI about the incident, but the FBI did not investigate. The FBI did not respond to a request for comment on the report.

"Brett Kavanaugh should start suing people for libel, or the Justice Department should come to his rescue," Trump wrote on Twitter.

It was unclear what action the Republican president was advocating the Justice Department take.

Kavanaugh did not comment to the Times on Stier's allegation. The Supreme Court press officers did not immediately return a request for comment.

Kavanaugh, a conservative appointed by Trump, was confirmed by the U.S. Senate in October after he denied accusations of sexual assault from three women. After acrimonious hearings, the Senate confirmed his appointment to the high court by 50-48 vote, one of the tightest margins ever for a justice.

"I sat through those hearings. Brett Kavanaugh lied to the U.S. Senate and most importantly to the American people."

Sen. Kamala Harris, on Twitter

Trump did not mention the Times article but blamed "radical left Democrats" and the "LameStream Media" for going after Kavanaugh. In a series of Twitter posts, he accused Democrats of threatening impeachment to influence Kavanaugh's opinions on court cases.

"They want to scare him into turning Liberal!" he wrote.

Three Democrats running to replace Trump in 2020 called for Kavanaugh's impeachment on Sunday.

"I sat through those hearings. Brett Kavanaugh lied to the U.S. Senate and most importantly to the American people," Sen. Kamala Harris wrote on Twitter. "He must be impeached."

"Confirmation is not exoneration, and these newest revelations are disturbing. Like the man who appointed him, Kavanaugh should be impeached," Sen. Elizabeth Warren said in another Twitter post.

Julian Castro, housing secretary under President Barack Obama, said the new allegation should be investigated.

"What's become clear is that he should be impeached," Castro told MSNBC. "Based on this new information, that's certainly what it appears like — that he lied under oath." REUTERS

UAW calls first national strike against GM since 2007

2 The United Auto Workers (UAW) said on Sunday that its roughly 48,000 hourly workers at General Motors Co. facilities would go on strike as of midnight Sunday after U.S. labor contract talks reached an impasse, the first nationwide strike at GM in 12 years. "We do not take this lightly," Terry Dittes, the UAW vice president in charge of the union's relationship with GM, said at a press conference in downtown Detroit. "This is our last resort." GM said in a statement that its offer to the UAW during talks included more than $7 billion in new investments, 5,400 jobs — a majority of which would be new — pay increases, improved benefits and a contract ratification bonus of $8,000. "We have negotiated in good faith and with a sense of urgency," the automaker said. A strike will very quickly shut down GM's operations across North America and could hurt the broader U.S. economy. Jordan selling Hornets share, will remain majority owner

3 Michael Jordan is selling a percentage of ownership in the Charlotte Hornets to a pair of New York-based businessmen. The deal is pending NBA approval, but that is expected to occur quickly, the Charlotte Observer reported. Jordan's new partners will be Gabe Plotkin, a founder of Melvin Capital, and Daniel Sundheim, a founder of DI Capital. How much of the team they will buy has not been disclosed, but the Observer called it "a large piece" though Jordan will remain majority owner. "I'm excited to welcome Gabe and Dan as my partners in Hornets Sports & Entertainment," Jordan said in a statement. "While I will continue to run the Charlotte Hornets, make all decisions related to the team and organization, and remain the team's NBA Governor, Gabe and Dan's investment is invaluable as we continue to modernize ... and strive to compete with the best in the NBA." Thieves steal $5M gold toilet from UK's Blenheim Palace

4 Burglars have stolen a fully-functional 18-carat gold toilet from Britain's Blenheim Palace, where it had been installed as an art exhibit, police said on Saturday. The toilet, valued at more than $5 million, was part of an exhibition of work by Italian conceptual artist Maurizio Cattelan which opened last week at the stately home 60 miles west of London, a major tourist attraction. The toilet, named "America", was previously on display in a cubicle at New York's Guggenheim Museum, where more than 100,000 visitors were able to use it. Thieves with at least two vehicles broke into the palace, the birthplace of World War II leader Winston Churchill, and removed the toilet some time before 5 a.m. local time, Thames Valley Police said. "Due to the toilet being plumbed in to the building, this has caused significant damage and flooding," Det. Inspector Jess Milne added in a public statement. REUTERS

State adjusting to more widespread EEE threat

Number of human cases in Mass. already exceeds national average.

The prevalence of Eastern equine encephalitis in Massachusetts this year has prompted Gov. Charlie Baker to float the idea of broader prevention efforts next year and two members of Congress to ask the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) for information about funding and other assistance.

The state Department of Public Health on Friday announced an eighth confirmed case of EEE, in a man in his 50s from northeastern Bristol County. One human case of another mosquito-borne illness, West Nile virus, and eight confirmed cases of EEE in animals have also been logged so far this year.

Public health officials have been advising residents to continue taking precautions to avoid mosquito bites — wearing bug spray, long sleeves and pants, and staying inside between dusk and dawn — even as the weather gets cooler in September.

On Thursday, U.S. Reps. Joseph Kennedy III and Katherine Clark wrote to CDC director Dr. Robert Redfield, noting that hundreds of mosquitoes across Massachusetts have tested positive for the virus and the number of confirmed human cases in the state “has already exceeded the national average of cases reported to the CDC annually.”

“With EEE spreading and diagnosed cases mounting, families are keeping children inside, seniors are at heightened risk and our state and local governments are stretching their emergency funding,” Kennedy said in a statement to the News Service. “As leaders across the state continue to do an extraordinary job fighting back against this outbreak, the Centers for Disease Control should be prepared to assist with

Clark and Kennedy’s letter inquires about whether “a public health threat such as EEE could be considered” for public health response grants and other potential funding. They ask for the centers’ “immediate attention to the dire outbreak of EEE.”

nosed with the rare but potentially serious mosquito-borne virus. “This is a terrifying disease, and we need to do everything we can to prevent it,” Clark said.

Thirty-five Massachusetts communities are now at critical risk for EEE, the DPH said Friday, with another 38 at high risk for the virus and 120 at moderate risk.

After discussing EEE prevention efforts with public health officials in Lakeville on Thursday, Baker said health and environment officials have been “working tirelessly” to combat EEE, including through trapping and testing of hundreds of thousands of mosquitoes.

He said he will work with lawmakers to make sure the state has the resources available to pay for additional spraying and monitoring. A spending bill Baker filed last week included $3.5 million for spraying. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

The perfect gray

More and more women are deciding to leave chemicals aside to keep their hair natural — a sign of authenticity, freedom and acceptance. If you want to own this look, follow these recommendations.

JAVIERA GARCÍA
letters@metro.us

The value of au naturel is back. Taking age on with dignity and letting time pass its effects on our body is part of a trend. While some continue to seek the key to eternal youth, others join a global movement that claims respect for nature.

That is why more and more women prefer to show off their hair as naturally as possible, almost as an act of liberation. So much so that gray hair has become a trend, and that is why some celebrities, such as Ariana Grande, Kim Kardashian and Cara Delevingne, have chosen this color to show off at important events.

The desire that women seek is to forget about this issue, not depend on their hairdresser or dyes that, in the long run, wear down the hair fiber — leaving behind those prejudices that women with gray hair seem older and that not hiding them is synonymous with carelessness.

How many times have we said that a man looks handsome with gray hair? Well, us too.

Although the most common reaction when they appear is to camouflage them, there is also the alternative of letting them grow in. And right now, fashion favors us:

Dyeing your hair gray is synonymous with style, avant-garde and character.

If you have been enslaved to beauty salons and hair dyes for years, perhaps it is time for you to rethink if this is necessary. You will save time and your pocket will thank you.

In case you want to rock white or gray hair, you must take some points into consideration. The process can be quite slow, so be patient. While the hair is growing, a mix of shades between the roots and the rest of the hair will happen — a small sacrifice before reaching the perfect target.

FIRST STEP

Ruby Figueroa (@rubyfigueroa), hairdresser and color expert, says that the process to achieve the desired target can last between six months and a year. During this period, there are options for retouching while reaching the final result, such as inversed highlights. "For example, a person who has very gray hair can get some in ash gray, beige or golden blonde, depending on their skin color," she explains. In this way, you can hide the contrast of colors while making the transition. Another alternative offered by the stylist is to apply natural dyes, such as henna or dyes without ammonia, such as Shades EQ.

"I WANT MY GRAYS"

Luz María Perelló is 58 and six years ago she decided to stop dyeing her gray hair to discover how it would look without color. "I wanted to know and accept myself, something that women at a certain age struggle with, and it has been the most spectacular experience of my life," she says. To make the change, she put herself in the hands of her lifetime hairdresser, asked for an original cut, and since then has completely left behind hair dyes, and so far has not regretted it. She says she feels much better than before and with a face that is more her own. "Women approach me every day on the street and ask me how I did it. They tell me they want to do it, but they don't dare," she adds.

Netflix's new limited series "Unbelievable" takes a closer look at an unimaginable real-life tragedy.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Imagine having a traumatic experience happen in your life, one so horrid that most people who go through the situation never speak of it again. Then imagine being brave enough to come forward, then be doubted, and then pegged a liar. Netflix's latest investigative limited series "Unbelievable" highlights a real case where that side-step of justice actually happened. The series does delve into the horrible reality of sexual assault and the rationality of believing a victim, but the story also shines a light on the insanely tenacious efforts two detectives go through to bring justice to those who so desperately need it. The series' creator and director, Susannah Grant, was compelled to bring this story to life onscreen the minute she heard it, and after all of the details surrounding this compelling narrative come to light, you will most definitely see why. Grant sat down with Metro to talk about the series, the case and why she believes this story highlights the polarizing highs and lows of the justice system.

What was the driving force for you to create this series?

It was the article that Ken Armstrong and T. Christian Miller wrote and published during publication with ProPublica and The Marshall Project — it was just so arresting. It was such an incredible story and had at its heart three such remarkable people, and I quickly thought [the story] could really benefit from being told in my medium. It just has this tremendous narrative, but underneath, it really shines a light on important issues in our country that not a lot of people were talking about. I wanted people to see sexual assault looked at through the lens of the investigation process itself. Both from the perspective of someone who has been raped and is going through the investigation process and how wrong that process can go, and also from the perspective of two really talented, determined and dedicated detectives, and showing what hard work it takes to bring justice to these people.

How much did you utilize the actual case files and statements from the detectives who worked on the case?

You know, I didn't lean on them that much because there was so much reporting that had already been done. We had access to the book, the article and the research materials, so a lot of our questions were already answered. We did reach out to those who were involved and let them know what we were doing, what our intentions were and we asked them a few small questions about the accuracy of what was out there already. But everyone thought the book was great so we didn't actually talk to them that much. We had a lot of the information that we already needed.

Were the two detectives in the series based on actual people?

They are not real, but they are inspired by actual people and the details of what they went through to apprehend this guy and solve this case. Those details are very close to reality. We tried to stick as close to the facts of that as possible just because they were so determined and I had such respect for the integrity that they brought to their work — it didn't need embellishment. But we did preserve their privacy, we changed their names and we dramatized the personal and inner lives of them, so that may or may not have anything to do with the real-life people.

Why do you think it's important and necessary for this story to be told?

When you look at just the statistics of the reporting ... This is just a horrendous crime, and it gets reported somewhere between 5 percent and 20 percent of the time it's perpetrated. And out of those, 5 percent are prosecuted. The numbers are just devastating and it's so clearly justice getting a pass. This was a really incredible story that had just a propulsive nature to it. Aside from the great storytelling, it revealed a lot of truths that I think a lot of people ignore.

"Unbelievable" is available to stream now on Netflix.

Former MMA fighter James Wilks on why going vegan is a 'Game Changer'

The athlete's documentary "The Game Changers" hits theaters for one night only tonight.

patrick.king@metro.us

The same old narrative has been set in stone ever since the concept of grilling meat has been around: Eating meat is your best bet for gaining protein and a surefire way to build the muscles needed to compete in any competitive sport. But, what if it was all just some clever marketing in order to move products off of shelves?

Former MMA fighter James Wilks had been a believer of the same old routine. As an athlete, he maintained a high-protein diet eating chicken, turkey and occasionally beef. He even adopted a paleo diet for a time to home in on getting as much protein in his system in order to maintain his muscle mass. But then something peculiar happened. After suffering an injury in 2011 while training for a fight, he decided to do some research into the food he had been ingesting. He began to understand that switching to a plant-based diet would provide a more direct source of protein without the inflammatory properties found in meat that can slow down your recovery. From there, he began to find out more, which resulted in Wilks being the subject of a brand-new feature-length documentary, "The Game Changers," directed by Academy Award-winning director Louie Psihoyos.

"I got injured training for a fight and I decided to do some research. As I did this research, I really felt like I'd been fooled or lied to," says Wilks about the start of his journey. "My parents had given me misinformation, not maliciously, but they had told me for years that I needed to eat meat and animal protein to be strong. Of course, the industry's marketing to everybody, saying that we need meat to be strong and we need milk for our bones; the opposite is true, actually. The countries with the highest dairy consumption have the highest rate of fractures. So I felt like I had been lied to. I woke up, literally, at 2 in the morning just out of nowhere and thought I should make a documentary about this and tell everybody. I hate being lied to. I just thought I'd tell the world what I found."

The film follows Wilks as he meets with famous professional athletes who have adopted a vegan diet including five-time Formula One champion Lewis Hamilton, world record-holding strongman Patrik Baboumian, and even famed muscular man and politician Arnold Schwarzenegger. Wilks also puts athletes from both the Miami Dolphins and the Tennessee Titans to the test with adapting a new diet to eye-opening results about the misconceptions tied to not eating meat and competing at such a high level.

"I think the primary [misconception] is that you need meat and animal products for protein. When we know now that all protein originates in plants and animals are only the middlemen," explains Wilks.

SPORTS

Patriots blast Dolphins, 43-0, on the road.

matthew.burke@metro.us

The Patriots' 43-0 blasting of the Dolphins Sunday at Hard Rock Stadium in Miami Gardens resembled that of an old-school WWE jobber match, with the Pats playing the role of the 500-pound, 7-foot-tall bad guy and the Dolphins looking like a pudgy truck driver from Allentown, Pennsylvania, fighting in his first match.

The Pats showed off most of their big moves, with a touchdown to Antonio Brown and a defense that sacked Dolphins quarterbacks seven times. The two fourth-quarter pick-6's by Stephon Gilmore and Jamie Collins served as a nice finishing maneuver, too.

Still, you got the feeling on Sunday that the Pats were just running their vanilla stuff on both sides of the ball, all day long. They'll save the advanced play-calling for when they actually play a good team in ... well ... they don't really play a good team for another month and a half.

Here are three things we learned about the Pats Sunday.

Best defense ev-ah

It's only two games in, but this Patriots defense has the makings of an all-time great unit. Dating back to the Super Bowl win over the Rams, the Pats defense has not allowed a single touchdown.

Through three quarters on Sunday, the Pats had only allowed the Dolphins to garner 38 total yards on offense, and at the final whistle, they had outgained Miami, 381-184, in total yardage.

Brown shines in Pats victory

GETTY IMAGES

Gilmore completely shut down the Dolphins' passing attack as Miami's best receiver on the day was Preston Williams, who had four catches for 63 yards — most of that coming in garbage time.

The Pats D had four total interceptions on the day, picking off Ryan Fitzpatrick three times and Josh Rosen once.

Brown exceptional

The Patriots did not shy away from getting their controversial new receiver involved in the game plan right away. In fact, you could make the case that Tom Brady tried a little too hard to get Brown a big receiving day at times.

On the first Patriots drive of the game, Brady targeted Brown three times and the former Steelers star hauled in all three, including an 18-yard gain.

Brown's production on that first drive set the tone for the game, as the Patriots quieted all 13 of the Dolphins fans in attendance.

Brown was the Pats' leading receiver on the day as he finished with four catches for 56 yards and the TD.

There was one point in the third quarter, though, that it seemed Brown and Brady were working out the kinks. Brady threw three incompletions targeted for Brown during one drive in the third, including one where the G.O.A.T. underthrew it to Brown in the end zone. The Pats settled for a field goal on that drive, and went up, 16-0.

Room for improvement

Picking nits is a huge part of Bill Belichick's greatness, and you can bet that he'll be able to find some negatives despite the lopsided score on Sunday.

Kicker Stephen Gostkowski is now a giant worry.

Gostkowski missed big kicks a few years back in an AFC title game loss to the Broncos; he missed a big one against the Eagles in Super Bowl LII; and he missed a couple in the "Miami Miracle" game last December.

Nervous-Nellie Pats fans have labeled Gostkowski as "shaky" for a while now, but things reached a boiling point yesterday in Miami as the 35-year-old missed two extra points as well as a field goal from 48 yards out.

Gostkowski is working with a new holder in rookie punter Jake Bailey, and the duo showed signs of struggle during the preseason.

Another negative for the Pats was another injury to their offensive line as Isaiah Wynn suffered a foot injury a Report: Brown rejected settlement offer

Patriots receiver Antonio Brown opted to decline a $2 million settlement offer from his sexual-assault accuser, Britney Taylor, around the same time he agreed to sign with the Patriots nine days ago. ESPN's Jeff Darlington first had the report. Last Tuesday, Taylor and her attorneys filed a civil lawsuit against Brown that alleges three separate incidents of sexual assault.

The NFL, which is holding its own investigation into the case, will meet with Taylor today. Brown will not be placed on the commissioner's exempt list at this time considering it is a civil suit and there has been no criminal investigation as of yet. Darren Heitner, Brown's attorney, has maintained this past week that Taylor and Brown had a "consensual personal relationship."

week after Marcus Cannon suffered a shoulder injury. Cannon did not play against the Dolphins after being listed as questionable early in the week. Wynn's injury does not appear too serious as he was walking under his own power to the locker room.

Chase Winovich celebrates with Jamie Collins during the Patriots' blanking of the Dolphins Sunday.
